Thirst for Knowledge meets Collecting Mania

extended until 22. november 2020

Museums face challenging times: what may have seemed invaluable to an ethnographic museum in the past – for instance, a collection of skulls – is now a sensitive issue. The exhibition explores the conditions of collecting in former times and poses questions as to the appropriate handling of sensitive objects today.

What did collectors gain in terms of knowledge by removing human remains, masks, and sculptures from their original context and transferring them to a museum? Why this enthusiasm for weapons such as arrows, which came to museums by the score? What is it about rare and precious materials such as ivory that triggers desires?

The exhibition provides lively insight into the history of collecting, ordering, categorizing, and research. It shows where thirst for knowledge in conjunction with collecting mania previously led to, how museums were forced to adapt their strategies, and how they today exploit the potentials of their vast holdings.
